As creatures of love, we give love and desire to be loved, it is only human. God created us to Love, for He is Love. The power of love is very powerful and it brings people together. For us not to love others would be like not living. There are no safety nets when it comes to love, there are risks. Love makes everyone vulnerable and therefore we can become hurt by the people we love. Oftentimes people play it safe not to get their heartbroken and naturally who wouldn't? Because the pain of a broken heart is very painful, and even the safest people have experienced a broken heart at least once in a lifetime.

In this deeply personal collection of poetry, writer Phil Cramp (the self-professed 'Gaylor Swift of his generation') delves into his diary of romantic exploits and unearths a trove of soured love affairs, embarrassing clunkers and passion-filled liaisons. Presented in three acts; Attraction, Heartbreak and Reflection, Phil recounts the experiences of an awkward heart as it attempts to navigate the highs and inevitable frustrations that come with dating the male species.

Many people are looking for their soulmate and expect to be blissfully happy when they find one. But, sadly, they seem doomed to disappointment. Soulmates are both a powerful fact and one of the biggest illusions of all time. The poems that became this book were written to ease the mind of my wife, Cindy. She had just been operated on for pancreatic cancer. A close friend of ours had just died from the same disease, and it was not pretty. At this time we had been married for thirty-six years. Cindy still had a lot of residual pain from the surgery, and was very afraid to die. I wrote her a love poem, and that made her feel better. Soon, I was writing more. I wrote poems that were loving, silly, or funny, anything to make her happier. Almost exactly a year later, I was in a motorcycle accident. It left me with a broken back, and eight ribs broken. I was in a cast which left me lying on my back for over four months. I became pretty good at writing on a notebook computer, with it resting on my cast, and up against my legs. Now we both had pain, and the poems brought us even closer. Other than the time that my family doctor told me that I had cancer (which turned out to not be true), things went along fine for about eight months. Cindys doctor had his assistant call her to say that her most recent test results were back from the lab. Without any preamble or emotion, she told Cindy that her cancer was back, and there was nothing that could be done! Cindy looked as if she had been shot. Now I really had to write some words that would help her on her last journey. I wrote to tell her how much I loved her, and how much she would be missed. The disease was consuming her body by this time, and she was becoming very weak. She continued on this downhill slide for approximately three months, until she finally required in-home hospice care. Her condition deteriorated considerably, but she still loved it when I read her my latest poetry. She started sleeping more and more, as she was having her pain managed with morphine. Our thirty-eighth wedding anniversary was August 20, and she managed to hang on until then. The next day, she slipped into a coma, and died four days later. I was beyond devastated. Cindy had asked me to get married again, even enlisting the help of her many girlfriends to find me a suitable mate. Before her death, that was a funny story. Immediately afterward, it was unthinkable! My whole world fell apart with her death. Cindy used to be the brightest spot in my life, my beacon, without her I was lost. I asked around, trying to find a grief counseling group, and found a grief sharing group run by a church. It totally worked! The people there all shared their grief with me, and I returned home feeling ten times worse. Many of these folks had lost a loved one from five to ten years before, but still cried at the mention of the departed person. I didnt wish to be like them, so I decided to take action. I started in again on writing poetry, this time for me. It had worked with our pain, perhaps it would help with my suffering. The first ones were rather dark, about loss and being alone. Gradually, they took a turn. They began to be about how happy I had been. Soon my poems were about being happy again. Quite a few of them were even whimsical; they had dragged me back from the brink of despair. Instead of just being happy, I wanted to be in love again. Cindy was right; I would not do well alone. There were several ways for people to meet, but most of them wouldnt work for me. I had seen ad for an online dating site, and decided to give it a try. There was a questionnaire which contained dozens of questions that were specially formulated to find matches for people, based on similar views of important subjects. I filled it out, and hoped for the best. I received several matches, and I started dating at a furious pace. It was crazy, I was going on eleven dates a week (one each weekday evening, three each, Saturday, and Sunday). It was tiring. Although I was going on so many dates, I was getting more matches than I could handle. I didn't know what to do! I became more selective in my judging of the respondents' answers, and of their p

This heart-wrenching collection of poems expresses the anger, hurt, depression of loss - asking why, analysing rifts and striving for explanation.

In Hans Selye's original groundbreaking work, "The Stress of Life," there is a list that compares the degree of stress typical in various situations. At the very top of that list is the death of a spouse. The author of "Je T'aime" ("I love you" in French) was well-versed in the field of loss and recovery, but all her training and experience could not have prepared her for the moment when her beloved husband of 30 years died in her arms. She writes: "Grief- I had studied it, attended grief seminars, and had become very familiar with the stages one must go through to find solace and peace. In my profession, I had often helped terminally ill patients die a more peaceful death while helping families through their grief. I thought I knew my stuff. Then Johnny died...." Though highly educated and experienced in helping others find their way through and beyond grief, the author became a reluctant student at the University of Pain where she experienced the intersection of the temporal and eternal for much, much longer than she had expected or anyone had predicted. "I often hear friends talking almost casually about their deceased spouse," she writes, "and I find myself asking myself: 'How long will it take you?' with the certainty that that day will never come. How can it? My best friend and soulmate has passed on. It takes all the energy I can muster to continue living. Joy has become a welcomed companion at brief intervals, but I am still at the stage where the pain gets unbearable at times and tears flow at the most unexpected places. This is what I am living, and again, I wouldn't change a thing." This book is an uncommon testament to an uncommon love. Brace yourself. You have never read another book like it in intensity and truth. Though some less schooled in the stark realities of grief may find this level-headed woman's description of what actually happened after Johnny's death worthy of critique, she took that risk in letting us all inside, for this, indeed, was a book that refused not to be written. "I am fully aware that most of what I have lived with Johnny following his death cannot be explained with the rational mind. Nevertheless, I know with certainty that I could not, of my own will, have created these experiences. This I have lived. This is how my healing came, and I am grateful for all of it." This "diary" of sorts will find its place among the most treasured of the books in your library. And you will, from time to time, be tempted to loan it to others who are trying to find their own way through the more or less uncharted wilderness of heartbreak to a joy that can heal their pain and mend their heart. But then, as you start to reach for your own copy you will realize that what your own friend needs is to have her own copy so she can absorb its truths and discuss them with you.

The loss of a love is a nearly universal emotional crisis, whether the end is divorce, desertion, or a mutually agreed-upon separation. At first, friends and family are there to offer a shoulder to cry on, but after a few months there's an expectation that we just need to get over the crisis and move on. Thus, unprocessed, painful feelings are buried, leaving us numb. Or we repeat damaging relationship patterns over and over again. The situation doesn't have to be like that. Healing a Broken Heart guides those of us grieving for a lost love through four metaphorical seasons of recovery with provocative questions -- and journal pages on which to respond -- to help move us forward. The four seasons serve as powerful metaphors for the stages of the grieving process. Summer is the season for charting the course of a relationship: remembering hopes and expectations, the warning signs that went unheeded. During autumn, journalers accept the reality of breaking up and acknowledge things about the relationship that didn't serve their needs. Winter brings the pain of grief over the profound loss. Finally, spring -- and, with it, renewal -- invites readers to examine and understand how their family history may have affected their past relationships. Punctuated throughout with poems and moving meditations, the thoughtful, interactive approach of this book offers the time and space we all need to heal when our hearts are broken.

As humans we form relationships with others, this comes as natural as learning to walk for most people. You struggle at first but eventually you're running. The problem we have is not forming relationships but trying to maintain these relationships past the getting to know each other stage, a stage that is never ending. The hardest thing for people to do in life is to live to please someone else. Because, we are all so different in every aspect of who we are, it is almost impossible to please most people that we are in relationships with. Relationships are something we take for granted. For instance, just because you love someone doesn't make it automatic. Relationships are something we must work at to become successful. We spend years preparing ourselves to achieve and maintain a satisfying career, but we do very little when it comes to maintaining a loving relationship. Some things we can learn naturally, being in a long-term relationship is not one of them. I hope by you reading these few words it will encourage you to stop taking your relationship, the people you love, their feelings for you, and your feelings for them, for granted. What you put in your relationship is what you will get out of it.

In the tradition of Post Secret and Other People's Love Letters, a crowdsourced compilation of letters, stories, and art work about the modern state of love and relationships, edited by rising filmmaker and beloved YouTube vlogger Will Darbyshire. "What would you say to your ex, without judgment?" This is the question filmmaker and vlogger Will Darbyshire posed to hundreds of thousands of his closest friends on YouTube. Seeking closure after a tough break-up, Will was driven to strike up an intimate conversation with his online audience, and to get at the heart of one of life's unknowable yet universal mysteries: love. Over a period of six months, Will posed a series of questions to his audience and asked them to reveal their innermost feelings about their own romantic experiences in the form of hand-written letters, poems, photographs, and emails. The result is a curated collection of responses that are, at turns, funny, dark, confessional, awkward, comforting, and uplifting. This Modern Love is a compelling portrait of individual desires, fantasies, resentments, and fears that reminds us that, whether we're in or out of love, we're not alone.
