Winnie Mandela, also known as South Africa's "Mother of the Nation," dedicated decades of her life to activism and to the struggle against Apartheid. The ex-wife of Nelson Mandela was an inspirational figure against racial injustice in South Africa, encouraging activists to stand up for what they believe in. She met Nelson Mandela in 1957 and had two children with him before he was arrested and sentenced to life in prison in 1964. But she was far more than just "the wife" in Nelson Mandela's long walk to freedom; she made a fight of her own and it was not an easy one. The couple separated in 1996, a few years after Nelson Mandela was released from prison (after spending 27 years in prison), but Winnie Madikizela-Mandela kept her work for freedom until the end. She died at the age of 81 and until then she was a voice for change in South Africa and for her words and actions, she made her way to be considered a major figure in the story of the revolution of South Africa and not only for being a central part of any Nelson Mandela biography... Winnie Mandela dies on 2 April 2018, but her strong (and some times controversial) ideals will stay with us for a long time and the purpose of this Winnie Mandela book is also to help keep her memories alive and at the same time be a tribute to the ones that struggle for equal opportunities for all. Remember her ideas in this eBook full of inspirational ideas and with the best Winnie Mandela quotes, a tribute to freedom fighters...

No Easy Walk to Freedom introduces young readers to one of the most famous freedom fighters in history. "South Africa is facing its most serious crisis since the end of white rule. Little more than a decade ago, with apartheid overcome and the African National Congress adjusting swiftly to high office, South Africa's new rulers aspired to forge a viable and prosperous state. Now, however, as the ANC lurches deeper into controversy with the election of heavily compromised Jacob Zuma as its leader, South Africa is poised to follow in the tragic footsteps of neighbouring state Zimbabwe. Though few like to admit it, some of the seeds of the ANC's decline were sown under Nelson Mandela himself, who turned a blind eye to the scourge of AIDS and also tolerated incompetence and even corruption among his coterie. His successor, Thabo Mbeki, widely regarded at first as the man who would bring much-needed rigour to government, has proved a terrible disappointment. He has overseen disastrous policies on the crisis in neighbouring Zimbabwe and the epidemic of violent crime, unpicked much of the multi-racial fabric that Ma"

The death of Nelson Mandela, the great South African fighter for freedom, in December 2013 prompted several colleagues within the World Council of Comparative Education Societies community to come together to think about the significance of his life and his work for education. This book is the result of that coming together. The contributing authors reflect on what his life, the commitments he made and principally the values he took into the struggle for freedom in South Africa mean for education. The point of departure for the book is that of honouring the man. It begins with the argument that the values for which he stood, namely, the unconditional dignity of all human beings, respect for difference and principally his lifelong commitment to justice, have a special significance for how we as inhabitants of an increasingly connected and interdependent world conduct our personal lives, our relationships with one another and with the material and living space which surrounds us. It is an ecological approach. As the world moves into a twenty-first century where, paradoxically, we know so much and yet appear to understand so little, and so find ourselves struggling to create social lives in which all of us can feel respected, can offer respect to others and live lives free of fear and anxiety, the values for which he stood have specific relevance for how we do the important job of teaching and what we put into it. Mandela poses deeply provocative questions about the kinds of lives we seek for ourselves and for everybody else around us.
