First runner-up for the British-Kuwait Friendship Society Book Prize in Middle Eastern Studies 2015. In ancient Egypt, wrapping sacred objects, including mummified bodies, in layers of cloth was a ritual that lay at the core of Egyptian society. Yet in the modern world, attention has focused instead on unwrapping all the careful arrangements of linen textiles the Egyptians had put in place. This book breaks new ground by looking at the significance of textile wrappings in ancient Egypt, and at how their unwrapping has shaped the way we think about the Egyptian past. Wrapping mummified bodies and divine statues in linen reflected the cultural values attached to this textile, with implications for understanding gender, materiality and hierarchy in Egyptian society. Unwrapping mummies and statues similarly reflects the values attached to Egyptian antiquities in the West, where the colonial legacies of archaeology, Egyptology and racial science still influence how Egypt appears in museums and the press. From the tomb of Tutankhamun to the Arab Spring, Unwrapping Ancient Egypt raises critical questions about the deep-seated fascination with this culture – and what that fascination says about our own.

Surveying more than three thousand years of Egyptian civilization, Egypt and the Egyptians offers a comprehensive introduction to this most rich and complex of early societies. From high politics to the concerns of everyday Egyptians, the book explores every aspect of Egyptian culture and society, including religion, language, art, architecture, cities, and mummification. Archaeological and documentary sources are combined to give the reader a unique and expansive view of a remarkable ancient culture. Fully revised and updated, this new edition looks more closely at the role of women in Egypt,

A historian by training and Egyptologist by vocation, the author dedicated an inordinate amount of time focusing on the quintessential nuts and bolts issues that contributed to the totality of ancient Egyptian civilization. The first two Introductions deal with the "emergence of man in Africa," having taught this for years; while the second addresses changes encountered in 2005 as contemporary Egyptians further modernized their facilities and become stricter about the ancient monuments. Egypt 2008 and Egypt 2010 as Introductions III and IV bring the reader up to the most modern developments in the ancient land and elaborates on restriction now being placed on visitors to the monuments. The other essays are extensively researched, to essentially add fuel to the pro and con discussion regarding the nature and dynamics of the "Origins of the Egyptians" and "The Conspiracy Against Ancient Egypt." More importantly, however, a great deal is presented to highlight and add color to the technical, cultural, religious and philosophic aspects of the Egyptian experience that has endeared this ancient African culture in the minds and hearts of humanity, down through the ages, and still it retains a magnetic attraction to this day. The photographs, illustrations, plans, papyrus art and entrance tickets of temples create an enjoyable pictorial imagery of the phenomenal civilization of Egypt/Kemet/Tawi in all its timelessness. This is indeed a highly comprehensive and informative yet easily readable book that provides food for thought for the student, the scholar and the general reader. sumonpublishers.com@sumonpublishers.com

A great introduction to the ancient world. Learn many interesting facts, the position is ideal for those who have not been interested in ancient Egypt so far, but also those who have already been interested in it will find something interesting. The history of Egypt interested the ancients themselves and did not cease to fascinate researchers of later periods. The nineteenth century brought a breakthrough in the form of the reading of Egyptian writing (Jean-François Champollion, Ippolito Rosellini), which made it possible to decipher the inscriptions and recreate the political history. The widespread interest of the 19th-century European societies, informed on an ongoing basis about the progress of works thanks to the dynamically developing press, led to a series of archaeological research expeditions and, as a result, laying the foundations for modern Egyptology. The origins of Egyptian civilization date back to the unification of the delta region (Lower Egypt) and the Nile Valley (Upper Egypt) in the predynastic period (c. 3500 BC). In historical times, successive variants of statehood followed one another in the form of uniform kingdoms (Old, Middle and New State), separated by periods of disintegration (First,

Second and Third Transitional Period). The declining period (1st millennium BCE) is the dominance of Assyria and Persia, and from the conquests of Alexander the Great, the Hellenistic period in the history of Egypt. The last form of ancient Egyptian statehood was the creation of a Roman province from the country on the Nile during the reign of Octavian Augustus (until the Arab conquest in the 7th century CE). The specific location was the main reason for the greatness and durability of the gains of Egyptian civilization. Communication through Sinai and Syropalestine with great civilization centers, such as Mesopotamia, Anatolia, and later ancient Greece, favored the exchange of ideas. The simultaneous ease of defense against threats from this neighborhood thanks to natural conditions (the Arabian Desert, the Red Sea, the deserts of the Arabian Peninsula in the east; the Mediterranean Sea in the north; the Sahara in the west) led to the persistence and homogeneity of Egyptian culture. The regular flooding of the Nile and, consequently, the high fertility of the soil were beneficial for the development of agriculture. The maintenance of a complex irrigation system created the need for administrative supervision, which in turn led to the creation of a strong central authority, which was later religiously ideologized, and the creation of a writing (hieroglyphs). The proximity of copper, gold and precious stone mines (Sinai, Nubia) contributed to the development of crafts and trade with neighbors, and the general availability of a durable building material in the form of stone favored the development of construction. Religion was a distinctive feature that distinguished
