A description of how federal laws are made and the legislative process in the United States Congress. The framers of our Constitution created a strong federal government resting on the concept of "separation of powers." In Article I, Section 1, of the Constitution, the Legislative Branch is created by the following language: "All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." Article I, Section 5, of the Constitution provides that: "Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, . . .". Upon this elegant, yet simple, grant of legislative powers and rulemaking authority has grown an exceedingly complex and evolving legislative process—much of it unique to each House of Congress.

The Commissioner of Education authorized the specialist in charge of commercial education of the Bureau of Education to confer with a small group of administrative professors in engineering and commerce for the purpose of discussing ways and means whereby a larger number of students in engineering and commerce might be prepared better for management positions in industry and commerce, and under date of February 15, the commissioner invited the presidents of higher institutions near St. Louis to send representatives for a conference with Dr. Swiggett, in that city on February 22. The members present at this preliminary conference asked for the immediate appointment by the Commissioner of Education of a committee to consider with Dr. Swiggett, at a second conference in Washington, on or about March 31, the subject of commercial engineering in its various aspects and to prepare one or more curricula in this field which can be recommended by the Bureau of Education for adoption in colleges and universities. It was further recommended that a general conference, national in scope, and fully representative of all interests in character, be held in the immediate future for the purpose of directing attention to the importance of this new type of training and to discuss one or more main topics essential to the preparation of commercial engineers. Pursuant to the wishes of the St. Louis conference, the Commissioner of Education immediately appointed a committee on commercial engineering and called a conference of this committee to meet in Washington, New Willard Hotel, March 31-April 1. The Commissioner of Education issued May 1, on behalf of the Conference Committee on Commercial Engineering, a call for a public conference to be held at the New Willard Hotel, in Washington, June 23 and 24, on the subject of business training for engineers and engineering training for students of business. Educational institutions with faculties in engineering and economics or commerce were invited to designate representatives to attend the conference. This bulletin reports the events during the conference. Appended are: (1) Courses of Study in Engineering and Commerce in Various Universities--Brief Statement of Present Practice and of Changes Contemplated; (2) List of Universities and Colleges with Colleges or Schools of Engineering; (3) List of Delegates; and (4) Resolution Adopted at the Fourth Session of the Conference with Reference to Engineering and Commerce. An index is included. (Contains 5 diagrams.) [Due to poor print quality, correct footnote count was unavailable. Best copy available has been provided.]
