The energy residue of forest residues such as unmerchantable tops and limbs left on site following conventional timber harvesting operations is widely recognized. Development in full-tree harvesting and the use of single-stem delimiters now offer opportunities for recovering logging residues directly at roadside. This study evaluated the efficiency and economics of chipping logging residues at roadside using mobile chipper-forwarders and trailer-mounted chippers and investigated the economics of transporting the energy chips to the end users' facilities. The report presents case studies of three biomass chipping operations. For each operation, a description of the equipment and working techniques used, characteristics of the study area and debris, and results of a short-term evaluation are presented. A transportation model is used to estimate transportation cost and a break-even price analysis is provided to estimate the cost of chips delivered at the end-user facility for varying transportation distances.
