Originally published in 1971, it was one of the first books to deal with a personal approach to dreams in a meaningful and non clinical manner. It was also among the firsts to include a dream dictionary that was not about good and bad luck, and the ridiculous statements found in the books still published purporting to be about dream meanings. There was an attempt to base the dictionary on research into what people actually met when they explored their dreams. Tony Crisp is an internationally renowned expert on dreams and their interpretation and the author of the best-selling 'Dream Dictionary: An A to Z Guide to Understanding Your Unconscious Mind'. Tony has worked at the vanguard of the personal development and self-help movement for more than fifty years, co-founding in the 1970s one of the first human growth centres in the UK. In addition to teaching and leading groups in self-development and yoga, he has worked variously as a photographer, journalist, writer and broadcaster both in the UK and abroad, acting as LBC's resident dream therapist for seven years. His Dream Dictionary, based on material from thousands of dreams gathered during three decades of research, has become a classic of the genre, and has been translated into seven languages worldwide.
