Growing up in a New England orphanage unaware of his family and of how he had lost his left hand as an infant, twelve-year-old Ren is terrified of the future, until a young man shows up claiming to be his long-lost brother, with whom he embarks on an adventure-filled odyssey of scam artists, petty criminals, and resurrection men. Little Fires Everywhere In this Celeste Ng's second novel, "Little Fires Everywhere," you will recognize a few ingredients from her acclaimed introduction, "Everything I Never Told You." There are the indications of racial tensions and incendiary family interactions under the surface of a quiet Ohio town. There are the appeal and hopelessness of assimilation, the all-consuming intensity of motherhood and the concealed lives of teenagers and their progenitors, each unknowable to the other. And there's a typical frame, too: At each novel's beginning, we know at least part of the melodrama that will befall the personalities, the mystery lies in understanding how they arrive there. In "Little Fires Everywhere," we begin with a house fire and new puzzles: Who set it, and why? The residence belongs to Elena and Bill Richardson, an affluent white couple who summarize success correctly, late '90s Shaker Heights, and their four teenage children, including girl-next-door Lexie and the troubled prankster Izzy, who is the suspected arson. "The firefighters said there were little fires everywhere," Lexie says. "Multiple locations of origin. Possible use of an accelerant. Not an accident." However, Izzy isn't the only one who appears to have fled the scene. Mia Warren and her daughter (a 15-year-old girl), Pearl, have also disappeared, abandoning the small house they rented from the Richardsons. Consequently, Ng again revisits the past for answers. It's Mia and Pearl's appearance in town 11 months earlier that starts the story. Mia is an alluring protagonist, a misfit traveler who might stand for Artist. She and Pearl have explored the country in their VW Rabbit with Mia's camera, living in dozens of municipalities before settling in Shaker Heights, here, Mia promises her daughter they will stay. Pearl, desiring to belong, quickly becomes a fixture in the Richardsons' home, involving her mother along with her. Witnessing these two families as they intermix and the clash is an utterly engrossing, often heartbreaking, profoundly empathetic encounter, not unlike watching a neighbor's house burn. And the exhibition doesn't stop with the Richardsons and Warrens. Ng also includes a custody battle that becomes the center of the town's attention, a 1-year-old girl who both her Chinese immigrant mother and the white couple who has raised the baby dispute. It's this vast and complicated labyrinth of moral affiliations and the nuanced all-knowing voice that Ng employs to navigate it, that makes this novel even more ambitious and accomplished than her debut. As soon as we meet the matriarch "Mrs. Richardson stood on the tree lawn, clutching the neck of her pale blue robe closed," we have the deceitful sense that our well-mannered storyteller is speaking from both inside and above the order-obsessed neighborhood.

rents her family's property on Winslow Road to Mia and Pearl Warren, a mother and daughter duo who inspire her sense of charity. Mia is an artist, and her lack of rootedness and intense focus on her art unnerve Mrs. Richardson, who lives an orderly life. Their lives become further enmeshed when Pearl befriends Moody, Mrs. Richardson's son, and eventually the rest of the Richardsons. As Pearl begins to adopt new teenager habits through her interactions with the Richardsons, Mia grows concerned and agrees to take on a part-time housekeeping job with the family to keep an eye on her daughter. Meanwhile, the town is swept into the controversy over the adoption of Mirabelle, or May Ling, a baby abandoned by Mia's Chinese coworker, Bebe, during a bout of postpartum depressive shock after her husband left her. A family in Shaker Heights, the McCulloughs, adopted Bebe's child after being unable to have children of their own. Bebe confides in Mia about her missing child, expressing a desire to find her again. When Mia hears that the McCulloughs adopted a Chinese baby around the same time that Bebe left her child at the firehouse, she realizes that Mirabelle must be Bebe's baby, May Ling. When Bebe unsuccessfully tries to get in contact with the McCulloughs to see her baby, Mia intervenes by helping her tell her story to local news channels. With such public uproar over the issue, the custody battle goes into trial.
