This book aims to discover the limits of European integration. To accomplish this the study uses grounded theory methodology to deal with some of the problems with European integration theories and international relations. Furthermore the idea of European Union (EU) is investigated in relation to Kantian and Hegelain thought which again allows a re-assessment of European integration and its limitations. The rationale for the study was provided by the rapidity of change that has taken place over the last fifteen years. As European integration intensified the theories that informed and explained the process became questionable. Theories previously discarded especially neo-functionalism, needed revisitation and re-assessment. This ground-breaking study provides such a re-assessment and through an empirical study reaches conclusions and makes generalisations regarding the process and limitations of European integration.

This title explores ways of overcoming the problems researchers may encounter in collecting and interpreting data generated from Hispanic studies.

This textbook provides an up-to-date account of ethnographic research methods. Using examples from many social science disciplines, the author introduces: paradigms used in ethnography, field work, equipment needed, analysis of data, differences and similarities between qualitative and quantitative approaches, the nature of the environment of contemporary ethnographic research, and writing the report. Throughout the author provides insights into putting people at ease and research ethics; he also includes a thorough introduction to microcomputer hardware and software useful in ethnographic studies.

The example-based text of Applied Research Methods in Criminal Justice provides students with practical and applied illustrations and instructions for the most commonly used research methods in criminal justice and criminology. Filling the void for a comprehensive research book, the author assumes that practical knowledge of research methods is more useful than theoretical knowledge of how research methods were developed. The procedures for applying the presented research techniques in appropriate criminal justice settings and for answering criminal justice research questions are included. Chapters are arranged in order from discussions of basic research designs and basic descriptive analyses to inferential analysis and research ethics.

In the past, computer-based information systems have been designed primarily for hierarchically structured organizations, reinforcing a single unified world view. This has been reflected in the design methods such as validity and consistency checking, information systems architecture, and information system use theories. Alternative organizational structures such as clans, network organizations, inter-organizational alliances and markets have different requirements, thus necessitating the emergence of a new perspective in information systems. As we develop information systems in the future, we must think of the user no longer as an individual but as a community. Fifteen excellent papers from the many interesting submissions are included in these proceedings along with four invited papers by leading representatives in the field. Also included are the briefing notes for four provocative panel discussions.

The study of and interest in adolescence in the field of psychology and related fields continues to grow, necessitating an expanded revision of this seminal work. This multidisciplinary handbook, edited by the premier scholars in the field, Richard Lerner and Laurence Steinberg, and with contributions from the leading researchers, reflects the latest empirical work and growth in the field.

With the primary objective of raising ethical sensibility, this volume details the ethical problems and dilemmas faced by applied social science researchers. Issues such as the use of deception, the participant's right to privacy and informed consent, and the potential harm of public disclosure are confronted. The author discusses the need to review ethical problems and their implications in the context of current ethical standards in both society and the scientific community. Case studies illustrate unanticipated ethical dilemmas which might emerge during a research project. Issues are presented and interpreted clearly so that their complexity can be penetrated and potential solutions envisioned. The volume also includes specific methodolo

Richard F. Carter was involved in the development of the communication field almost from the beginning. Most closely associated with the mass communication tradition, he has nevertheless become a source of theoretical and methodological illumination for scholars in widely disparate arenas. This book brings together 15 exemplar chapters illustrating the applications of Carter's work to specific avenues of scholarship, and 23 commentaries that focus on Carter's academic life in the context of the communication field's history. The volume includes a chronology of Carter's professional life and a bibliography of his works. It concludes with an original essay by Carter.

In a volume that brings together a wide range of disciplines - art history, sociology, architecture, cultural anthropology, and environmental psychology - Irene Cieraad presents a collection of articles that focuses on the practices and symbolism of domestic space in Western society. These essays go beyond the discussion of conventional issues such as aesthetics and social standing. At Home takes an in-depth anthropological look at how different cultures use their homes as a visual model of the culture's social structure.
