This story explores a perceived world of chaos where order is perceived, absolutes where relativism is absolute, and love spawned from hatred. Paul Berkely, a journalist, is not aware that this perception exists, but he is forced to face it when his path is entwined with a man described as "The Hater."

about the quality of various institutions of higher education. Yet, over the past half century accreditation has evolved into a system for determining eligibility for the receipt of funds from third parties, most notably the federal government, but also in many cases state governments or private philanthropies. The typical policy paper on accreditation does a fine job of detailing the history of the system and major issues that confront it today. It then usually concludes by sketching out some recommended reform. However, while it may point out a few areas in which the proposed reform would be an improvement over the current system, there is rarely any discussion about how such a reform is better than the alternatives, or what impact it would have in other areas. This paper takes a slightly different approach. While throughout the authors do discuss some of the historical role of accreditation, their main focus is on evaluating the performance of the current system and evaluating possible reforms. Part one presents their analysis of accreditation's performance. They identify four eras of accreditation in order to assess both its effectiveness and its changing role over time. Part two of the paper identifies the most commonly suggested reforms of, and replacements for, accreditation. The authors analyze the likely impact of each reform, and briefly discuss whether it would be appropriate given the goals as have been discussed. The third part of the paper builds off the conclusions of the first two parts to make the case for replacing the accreditation system. The final part lays out their recommendations. (Contains 17 tables and 208 notes.).

often, these "new-and-improved" products are hard to use because the engineers who are developing the interface between the user and the machine don't think like the average man-on-the-street who knows nothing about technology. Therefore, the situation effectively becomes the equivalent of letting the inmates run the asylum in which they are incarcerated. Better products need to be developed that work in the same way that average people think. Only then will new products deliver on their implied promise of enhancing the quality of life for their users. According to Alan Cooper, designers who are skilled in this specific field should be responsible for designing the interface between the user and the machine. This summary asserts that the goal of computer usage should be "not to make anyone feel stupid". Zach asked Josie what she really thought of the present state of affairs. "I'm tempted to use that line from my favorite movie, 'Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn.'" "Okay, Scarlet. But surely you are concerned over what's been going on. That famous memory of yours must be putting ... what do you call them? Oh, yes, patches. Aren't you putting two and two together and getting five? That's what you usually do." It was Josie's turn to laugh. "Honestly, Zach, what I'm putting together reads like a script for a bad spy movie. We have nothing but red herrings, a mishmash of motley characters from various parts of the globe, more spies than villains, an attempted kidnapping, a fistfight, a car chase, a car blown up, a car accident, an escape on a motorcycle, nefarious thugs, virtuous good
