Life is never perfect, never was and never will be. We all agree on that, don't we? What feels perfect at one point, later, somehow, draws into a ton of uncertainties. Is someone responsible for that? Can anyone really preserve a perfect moment? Yes? No? Maybe? The same applies to the characters in this book. For the Biyani brothers, Chirag and Vishal, life is a journey of unexpected twists and turns! Chirag is friends with Aakriti, Jai and Vaishali. They enjoy togetherness, friendship, love and respect for each other. All is well until Chirag strays into the direction where there's a dead-end, an unbreakable wall perhaps, and the wall is Vaishali. Emotions churn leading to an outcome that is highly undesirable. Vishal, on the other hand, finds himself at a crossroad, one path leading to his brother, and the other... Well, read the story to find out.

In this book, I would like to talk about some of the things that I feel are important to us as human beings and as part of society, which could give us a second chance to see things in a new perspective. We all have our own values, and we all know what is important to us. But can we assume that there exist values which are not subjective? Parenthood, schooling, higher education, self-teaching, reading. All of these have one thing in common, they change “who and what” we are. What we decide is important to us or not, depends on whether it is of value to us. There are things in today's society that have lost value to people. Our needs create the motivation we need to keep us on the move. Depending on the importance of each need, we put them into priorities.

Unconscious-self. Yes, you will ask, how can it have a will and be unconscious? To be honest, I don't believe it has a mind of its own but it does have a will. Many times, when I wake up remembering fragments of my dreams, I get the feeling what is commonly known as “Deja vu”. The only problem is that I have no recollection of the experience at all. Our unconscious-self has a way of “talking” to us. Sometimes, it “talks” with force, other times with a light touch on our shoulder. What I hope for the readers of my two books (which might become three or more), is that in some way, I persuaded them to think out-of-the-box, in another dimension, about ideas which even though they are not new, they have been forgotten.

A CASE STUDY—IN LOVE? For as long as foster dad Jeff Aquilon could remember, he'd viewed state social workers as one thing: the enemy. But that was before he'd met Caileen Hall, a woman who truly seemed to have his family's best interests at heart. Jeff had to admit that something about the pretty, passionate Caileen stirred his interest, too. Though single mom Caileen desperately wanted to help the Aquilons succeed, much to her daughter's chagrin, Caileen's strictly professional concern for Jeff soon mingled with feelings she hadn't encountered in years. But to make peace with her own family, would Caileen have to give up the love of her lifetime?

In a novel that reaffirms her reputation as "America's Queen of Suspense," Mary Higgins Clark delivers a gripping tale of deception and tantalizing suspense. Nicholas Spencer, charismatic head of the medical research company Gen-stone, involved in the development of an anticancer vaccine, suddenly disappears. His private plane crashes en route to Puerto Rico, but his body is not found. Early results of the vaccine seemed highly promising. Yet, coinciding with Nicholas Spencer's disappearance comes news that the FDA is denying approval. Then follows the shocking revelation that Spencer had looted Gen-stone of huge sums of money

-- including the lifetime savings of people who had risked every penny they had. Marcia "Carley" DeCarlo, the thirty-two-year-old columnist for the Wall Street Weekly, is assigned to cover the story. Carley is the stepsister of Spencer's wife, Lynn, an aggressive PR woman and socialite, whom she dislikes and distrusts. The day after news of her husband's disappearance rocks the financial and medical world, Lynn attends a meeting of the stockholders of Gen-stone, flaunting expensive clothing and jewelry. Accused of having participated in the scam, she appears indifferent to the anger and despair of the people attending, among them a man whose child has cancer and who is now about to lose his home. That night, she narrowly escapes death when her mansion in Bedford, New York, is set on fire. She turns to Carley, begging her to use her investigative skills to prove that she was not her husband's accomplice. As Carley proceeds with her investigation, she is confronted by seemingly impenetrable questions: Is Nicholas Spencer dead or in hiding? Was he guilty or set up? Why the sudden reversal in medical opinion of the vaccine from recognition to condemnation? And as the facts begin to unfold, she becomes the target of a dangerous group involved in a sinister and fraudulent scheme. The Second Time Around is Mary Higgins Clark at her best, telling a story that intertwines fiction with the stuff of real-life headlines in a novel of breathtaking suspense and surprises.
